

How to cross the streets in Vietnam

First, one might think that crossing a street has to be something simple. Then, you get there and someone can change my mind. Every working moment, Mall hours before the official start, there are thousands of motorbikes that pass in the process of greater affluence, reinforced by cars and trucks. Never stop and the lights, if they exist, are decorative. The same applies to pedestrian walkways. And yet, despite all this, it's even crossing the street.

Hanoi is not quiet, but the worst is Ho Chi Minh or Saigon, as it was called back then, and continues to call for almost everyone in the region, it is a mess. But come on, all you have to do is ... go through. With a right step, without running and never stop. What abroad should understand is that people who drive are used to this, it's so routine as we stop at a red traffic light. See pedestrians and adjust its trajectory, in terms of speed and direction, the train will trace Walker. But for this it is essential that this line does not suffer changes, there is, with a stop or a change of speed.

All this I already knew even before arriving. In theory. Once in place, the heady thing, but what I had taught – here do the same – it is true and works. It is just the first time, so to speak. You might want to keep an eye on them, of course, but that won't be necessary. The pawn may even cross a street super-movementada eyes closed and will reach the other side unharmed. Oddly enough, in the end it is even safer and easy cross-street in Vietnam.

Once you master this technique became a star with the tourists that way. I found myself with a legion of followers, walking behind me or beside me, catching rides to crossing paths that they Durst not cross alone. It became fun, because I won the awareness that is extremely simple knowing that for those who do not know it seems almost impossible.
